Que. 1 Directions: Read the passage given below and answer the questions by selecting the correct/most appropriate options:

Increased time constraints and the need for convenience in raising children appear to offset parents' concerns about the future when it comes to their carbon footprints, according to new research by University of Wyoming economists and a colleague in Sweden.

UW's Jason Shogren and Linda Thunstrom, along with Jonas Nordstrom of the Lund University School of Economics and Management, have documented that two-adult households with children emit over 25 percent more carbon dioxide than two-adult households without children. Their research appears April 15 in PLOS One, a journal published by the Public Library of Science.

"While having children makes people focus more on the future and, presumably, care more about the environment, our study suggests that parenthood does not cause people to become 'greener,'" Shogren and Thunstrom say. "In fact, the difference in CO2 emissions between parents and non-parents is substantial, and that's primarily because of increased transportation and food consumption changes." The study involved an analysis of expenditures on goods and services by households in Sweden. The researchers found that parents with children at home consume goods and services that emit CO2 in the areas of food, such as meat, and transportation, such as gasoline, at higher rates than childless households.

The economists note that time constraints become more binding, and convenience may become more important when people have children." Parents may need to be in more places in one day," resulting in people driving themselves instead of using public transportation or bicycling, the researchers wrote. "They also need to feed more people. Eating more pre-prepared, red meat carbon-intensive meals may add convenience and save time."The disparity in the carbon footprints of Swedish households with and without children is particularly striking, as concerns about climate change are more pronounced in Sweden than most other developed countries. Most Swedes believe climate change is real and have accepted sizable CO2 taxes, and households with children are subsidized, which helps to alleviate some of the time crunches for parents. Sweden has generous parental leave and subsidized daycare, and parents have a legal right to reduced work hours.

"If we're finding these results in Sweden, it's pretty safe to assume that the disparity in carbon footprints between parents and nonparents is even bigger in most other Western countries," Thunstrom says -- though she notes that Sweden also has one of the world's highest female labour participation rates, which may add to the time constraints of household with children. "Becoming a parent can transform a person -- he or she thinks more about the future and worries about future risks imposed on their children and progeny," Shogren says. "But, while having children might be transformational, our results suggest that parents' concerns about climate change do not cause them to be 'greener' than non-parent adults."

Which of the following statements is TRUE with reference to the passage?

1. The mortality rate of Sweden is the highest in the world.
2. Sweden has limited parental leave and daycare.
3. Sweden has one of the world's highest female labour participation rates
4. Adults consume more goods than children.
5. Sweden has the highest disparity in carbon footprints between parents and nonparents.

1. Allay
2. Intensify
3. Appease
4. Lucid
5. Torrent

Correct Option - 2

Que. 5 Why the disparity in the carbon footprints of Swedish households with and without children is particularly striking ?

1. Because most Swedes believe climate change is unreal.
2. Because they believe becoming a parent makes one responsible.
3. Because the difference in CO2 emissions between parents and non-parents is substantial.
4. Because the mortality rate of Sweden is decreasing as per the trends.
5. As concerns about climate change are more pronounced in Sweden than most other developed countries.

Correct Option - 5

Que. 6 What did the researcher find among parents with children at home?

1. They create havoc and waste household supplies.
2. They become smart and responsible over the period of time.
3. They consume goods and services that emit CO2 in the areas of food.
4. They help in building economy by consuming goods.

5. They contribute lesser amount of carbon emission in comparison to adults.

Correct Option - 3

Que. 7 Why the difference in CO2 emissions between parents and non-parents is substantial?

1. Because of the changes in sleeping pattern
2. Because of inflation
3. Because of the changes in daily routine and lifestyle.
4. Because of increased transportation and food consumption changes.
5. Because children are often irresponsible and careless.
