Read the given passage carefully and answer the questions that follow:

The classical discourse on fashion was mainly provided by Herbert Spencer, Ferdinand Tönnies, Thorstein Veblen, and Georg Simmel, who made an attempt to theorize and conceptualize fashion (which is an abstract idea), and separate it from clothing or dress, which is a material and tangible object/artefact. They all shared a common view that fashion is about the process of imitation, since social relationships are essentially imitative relationships – each scholar with a variety of analytical emphasis. Fashion, with its imitative nature, is a crucial phenomenon in understanding society, and this comes from a social hierarchy embedded in the system which implies that the imitators are the ones who are at the lower end of the social spectrum while the imitated ones are the ones at the upper end. This is a fundamental principle of a “trickle-down” theory of fashion, later called a “class-differentiation” theory by Herbert Blumer.

Herbert Spencer (1820-1903), a British sociologist and philosopher, was one of the first European social scientists to discuss the idea of fashion towards the end of the nineteenth century. In his view, fashion is a symbol of the manifestation of relationships between superiors and inferiors that functions as a social control. There are various expressions of respect and deference through presents, visits, forms of address, titles, badges and costumes that express domination and submission, and fashion is an example of this and it represents one's social rank and status. Spencer does not explicitly discuss the distinction between clothing and fashion but implies that what is important is not the actual clothes that are worn, but the wearer's social placement in society, which has the power to transform clothing into fashion. For Spencer, writing in 1896, fashion is intrinsically imitative : “Imitative, then, from the beginning, first of a superior's defects, and then little by little, of other traits peculiar to him, fashion has ever tended towards equalization. Serving to obscure, and eventually to obliterate the marks of class distinction, it has favoured the growth of individuality.” He suggests two types of imitation that are still applicable to contemporary fashion: (1) reverential imitation which is prompted by reverence and adoration for the one imitated, and (2) competitive imitation that is prompted by the desire to assert equality with another person.

Read the given passage carefully and answer the questions that follow :

Everyone loves an "it" bag. From the Birkin to the Telfar, who you're carrying can hold the same weight as who you're wearing. The problem with "it" bags, however, is that their popularity causes many brands to manufacture scarcity. After all, is it really an "it" bag if everyone has one?

Now, I've never been in love. But the closest thing I've experienced has been locking eyes with a Gray Diór Caro bag. However, as a college student, the $3,000 price tag was not exactly in my budget. Therefore, I decided to do some research to figure out my options. I knew there was a market for second-hand bags; however, one Google search with "The Real" + "fake" returned dozens of articles about how luxury second-hand websites are filled with high-quality counterfeits. While the used bags were notably cheaper than the new ones, the thought of saving up $1,000 to only end up with a counterfeit stressed me out. Which made me wonder, why not just cut out the middleman, spend even less money, and purchase the fake?

This led me to the world of digital fashion communities. Albert Muniz and Thomas Guinn introduced the concept of a "brand community" in 2001, defining it as a "specialized, non-geographically bound community, based on a structured set of social relations among admirers of a brand." Brand communities allow groups of people to gather, connect with one another, and engage in brand-related discussions. Muniz and Guinn argued that brand communities exhibit the three traditional markers of community: shared consciousness, rituals and traditions, and a sense of moral responsibility.

Diving into Online Brand Communities (OBCs) on Reddit, Facebook, and fashion forums, I was able to find that OBCs are working to both deter and encourage activity in the counterfeit market. Replica subreddits argue that purchasing a replica is not an immoral act. Many users on these threads defend their replica purchases. Popular arguments are that large luxury companies are exclusionary, charge high prices, and have harmful production practices. On the other hand, there are also other groups on Facebook, fashion forums, and Reddit that combat counterfeit goods through formal and informal prevention of counterfeit discussions (gatekeeping), product authentications, and moral discussions. Some of the groups have created a formal policy banning discussions concerning the buying or selling of counterfeit goods. However, both these communities provide a special way for fashion lovers to meet and help each other on their own journeys to finding the bag of their dreams.

Read the given passage carefully and answer the questions that follow :

With increasing emphasis on sustainability and the rise of the Tik-Tok #thriftflip trend, thrift stores are booming. The value of the thrifting industry is now estimated at 28 billion dollars. The resale of goods is accredited to the 70s hippie movement. However, in 2021, Gen-Z expanded its horizon, with more stores emerging on street corners and social media. Destigmatizing second-hand shopping seems ethical. But our preoccupation with the influencer culture and emphasis on over-consumption is a decisive defeat for the lower classes who notice thrift store prices skyrocketing.

Discussion surrounding problematic thrift hauls arose in late 2020. Thrifting became trendier when fashion influencers displayed their enormous collection of thrifted goods afforded to them by their exorbitant wealth. The influx of consumers has increased the prices of second-hand items, widening the class distinctions between rich and poor in a place that was once accessible to the lower classes.

It is tempting to believe that thrifting would eliminate classism and elitist haute couture culture, but the enmeshment of class discrimination and racism paints a clearer, more complicated picture. Racial stigma in retail shopping significantly alters consumptive patterns of Black and Brown customers. Thus, consumers' racial-profiling also restricts the ways in which people of colour access brands.

Also, thrifting is not completely ethical, even if we analyze it without socio-political underpinnings. It doesn't necessarily reduce our environmental impact. Reducing the circulation of clothes produced per year is essential to make a difference in sustainability. However, rampant over-consumption in an influencer culture works as an insidious equalizer, devouring the modicum of sustainability that comes out of thrifting. Additionally, shortening trend-cycles causes more and more clothes to end up in a second-hand pile with not enough people (or not enough people with the money) to buy the designer clothes.

What is the central argument of the given passage?

Options :

5310023449.

The passage discusses the effects of influencer culture on thrifting and credits it with taking vital steps to destigmatize second-hand shopping and reducing over-consumption.

5310023450.

The passage weighs in on the ethics of thrifting and how it has significantly reduced the environmental impact of the fashion industry.

5310023451.

The passage critically analyses the problems that have emerged with the rise of thrifting and argues that it is neither ethical nor sustainable, due to our preoccupation with the influencer culture. It also highlights the complex socio-political underpinnings of thrifting.

5310023452.

The passage problematizes the idea that thrifting is the answer to shortening trend-cycles. The passage highlights the numerous ways in which thrifting has widened class distinctions while admiring some success in reducing social stigma in retail shopping.

Also, thrifting is not completely ethical, even if we analyze it without socio-political underpinnings. It doesn't necessarily reduce our environmental impact. Reducing the circulation of clothes produced per year is essential to make a difference in sustainability. However, rampant over-consumption in an influencer culture works as an insidious equalizer, devouring the modicum of sustainability that comes out of thrifting. Additionally, shortening trend-cycles causes more and more clothes to end up in a second-hand pile with not enough people (or not enough people with the money) to buy the designer clothes.

Correct Marks : 1 Wrong Marks : 0.25

What is the central argument of the given passage?

Options :

5310023449.

The passage discusses the effects of influencer culture on thrifting and credits it with taking vital steps to destigmatize second-hand shopping and reducing over-consumption.

5310023450.

The passage weighs in on the ethics of thrifting and how it has significantly reduced the environmental impact of the fashion industry.

5310023451.

The passage critically analyses the problems that have emerged with the rise of thrifting and argues that it is neither ethical nor sustainable, due to our preoccupation with the influencer culture. It also highlights the complex socio-political underpinnings of thrifting.

5310023452.

The passage problematizes the idea that thrifting is the answer to shortening trend-cycles. The passage highlights the numerous ways in which thrifting has widened class distinctions while admiring some success in reducing social stigma in retail shopping.

Labels and logos range from simple tags attached to products to complex graphics that are part of the packaging. Labels and brand logos can support the brand's positioning and add personality to the brand. In fact, they can become a crucial element in the brand-customer connection. Customers often become strongly attached to logos as symbols of the brands they represent. Most successful brands have adapted their logos to keep them contemporary and to meet the needs of new digital devices and interactive platforms such as mobile apps and social media. However, companies must take care when redesigning their logos, because customers have a strong association with well-established brand logos.

Read the following client brief sample and answer the question that follows:

CLIENT INFORMATION

The client is an online ice-cream company that is in need of a name, logo, and stationery. They are looking for a logo that needs to include a shipping truck, box and ice-cream. They would like to use a maximum of three colours and apply the old concept of “ice-cream in a box.” They would also like the logo to be placed inside a tall rectangle. I believe that the company would like to appear retro or vintage but also come across as convenient, quick, and simple.

DESIGN CHALLENGE & PROJECT CONCEPTS

The name, logo, and stationery designs all present their own challenges with the same goal in mind- to produce appealing, desirable, and imaginative designs. Coming up with a name will most likely prove to be the most challenging because I believe that a catchy, interesting, and an easy-to remember name is key to attracting customers for a business that is just starting out. One of the limitations I will have to adjust to is the use of a maximum of three colours in the logo, considering that I typically use lots of colours in my designs.

DESIGN

The company would like their logo to be placed inside a tall rectangle and to include ice-cream, a box and a shipping truck. They have also requested a maximum of three colours and for the logo to remind people of old-style ice-cream in a box. I believe I will be using brown, pink and an off-white/beige colour, inspired by the traditional Neapolitan ice cream. In terms of typography, I might include fonts such as Thirsty Rough, Lighthouse, and Mouse Deco. Contemporary, modern and new-age designs have been very trendy lately so I plan to take a retro spin on this design and bring back the poster style of the 1950s in order to appeal to an older audience.
