Q.No: 5	How should an administrative officer respond effectively and empathetically when a large, frustrated crowd gathers at a public grievance window due to a digital server crash delaying certificate issuance?
	Deploy security personnel immediately to clear the area and protect the office property from potential damage.
	Announce the technical issue clearly, acknowledge their frustration, and provide a realistic manual alternative or timeline.
	Retreat to the inner office until the technical team resolves the server crash to avoid personal confrontation.
	Promise immediate delivery of all certificates within an hour to temporarily calm down the agitated gathering.

Q.No: 6	Your team's three-month effort on a major development proposal is completely rejected by the ministry without explanation. As an emotionally intelligent leader, how can you best maintain team morale and long-term engagement?
	Express frustration regarding the ministry's lack of transparency to mirror the team's disappointment, aiming to build a sense of unity by collectively positioning yourselves as the "victims" of an unfair process.
	Facilitate an open reflection session to acknowledge the emotional weight of the rejection, validate the team's hard work, and pivot the focus toward synthesising the lessons learned and refining the strategy for future opportunities.
	Pivot immediately to a new, unrelated project to avoid dwelling on the past, intentionally suppressing discussions about the rejection to maintain a culture of relentless forward momentum and avoid potential loss of confidence.
	Conduct a forensic post-mortem to identify individual shortcomings or errors that may have led to the rejection, ensuring that team members understand where their personal contributions fell short of the mark.

Q.No: 8	During a professional team discussion, a female colleague is frequently interrupted and talked over by male team members. Although she visibly attempts to re-enter the conversation multiple times, she fails to gain the floor. What is the most appropriate action for you to take?
	Choose to let the incident pass without any intervention, justifying your inaction by assuming that this is simply the natural way professional discussions function sometimes.
	Directly confront the male team members in front of everyone and aggressively tell them to stop interrupting the female colleague while she is trying to speak.
	Suggest to the female colleague privately that she should attempt to speak much more assertively in future meetings to ensure her voice is heard by others.
	Publicly acknowledge the value of her contribution and actively invite her to complete her thoughts, thereby ensuring she has the opportunity to speak to the group.
